Dear Nili,

Stefan is excited about the meeting. We just have to work around his obligations at the book fair (he is the fair's main financial supporter and is always present at the events).

He feels an early breakfast on Monday morning will be the best, as he is scheduled to arrive right before the opening ceremony on Sunday evening. (read below)

Would you and Ehud be able to make breakfast at the inconvenient hour of 8.00 in the morning?

Help me figure this one out…not sure how long you are staying in Israel that week.

Thanks,

Deborah

...If I may add one proviso - if the plane is late or customs bad...the prior time to the opening might get cut short...Monday is safer...we need a bit of room for time

Dear Deborah,

Following up to Stefan's email, I do see a possibility for a breakfast meeting on Monday morning 8.00 – 9.00 am, as the official program will start at 9.00 am. Stefan will stay at the Miskenot. If the breakfast should take place in another hotel we should think for logistical reasons of having it at 7.30 – 8.30 am

One could alternatively only think of having the meeting right before the official opening of the Fair. Stefan will arrive in the late afternoon in Tel Aviv and depending on customs and travel to Jerusalem that would not really leave much time, perhaps 45 min – 60 min?

Does this help?

Kind regards,
Beatrice

Dear Deborah,

A big thank you for this invitations. I would love to meet Ehud and could possibly only do Monday morning, unfortunately, arriving Sunday too late in the afternoon.

But even on the morning the time might be tight, Beatrice will give you more details and coordinate.

All best and looking forward to seeing you (being really happy that from all I hear the JIBF is on a roll again).

Stefan

Dear Stefan,

The Baraks can also meet for lunch on Monday, February 9th if that would be more convenient…

Thank you,

Deborah

Dear Stefan,

I hope this finds you well and enthusiastic about this year's book fair. Yael is doing splendid work – between the new venues and her programming I believe we'll have a very improved fair.

Last week I was in New York with former Prime Minister Ehud Barak selling the rights to his book MOMENTS OF TRUTH; Living with War, Striving for Peace. The St. Martin's team were really brilliant and won the auction, acquiring World rights.
I wonder if you would be interested in meeting with Barak while you are here. Due to prior commitments in Europe he is only available on Sunday the 8th – the day of the opening. Would you want to have lunch or drinks with him that day?

He is a fascinating and charming man – whom I think you would enjoy meeting.

I trust this invitation is not an imposition upon your time here….

All my best,

Deborah
